
CONTRIBUTORS

Gabriela A. Buitrón Vera (Ph.D. University of Colorado, Boulder, 2020) is a Lecturer of Spanish at Binghamton University, SUNY. Her research draws together debates about Mexico, visual culture, discourses of the nation, disaster, and Latinx narratives. Her forthcoming article in The Oxford Research Encyclopedia of Latin American History examines comic book depictions of the Mexico City Earthquake of 1985 to argue that a careful reading of popular culture can help us examine 20th and 21st century discourses of the nation in Mexico, Latin America, and beyond.

Alexander M. Cárdenas (Ph.D. University of Colorado-Boulder, 2020) is a Visiting Assistant Professor of Spanish at Colorado College. His academic research and teaching interests include colonial and contemporary Latin American literature, Amerindian literature, late medieval and early modern religions and cultures, race and ethnicity studies, decolonial and transatlantic studies, and phenomenology.

Quan Manh Ha and Mia Tompkins are both from the University of Montana, where Quan Manh Ha is professor of American Literature & Ethnic Studies. His research fields include multiethnic US literatures, Vietnam War literature, and literary translation. His articles have appeared in various journals such as Short Fiction in Theory and Practice, Asian American Literature: Discourses and Pedagogies, Ethnic Studies Review, and Southeast Asian Studies. He has published two books: Other Moons: Vietnamese Stories of the American War and Its Aftermath (Columbia UP, 2020) and Luminous Nights: Pioneering Vietnamese Short Stories (La Frémillerie, France, 2021). Mia Tompkins graduated from the University of Montana in 2019 with a B.A. in English with a concentration in Literature and a minor in Climate Change Studies. She was Professor Ha's research assistant.

Victoria Vygodskaia-Rust (Ph.D. Washington University in St. Louis) is an independent scholar. Her research interests include fashion under totalitarian regimes, New Women of the Weimar Republic, Austrian-Jewish author Vicki Baum, and film in Putin's Russia. Rust has previously published her work in German Studies Review and Studies in 20th & 21st Century Literature. She is currently writing a book analyzing influences of Nietzsche in the works of the early-twentieth-century writer Anastasia Verbitskaia.